

http://www.chicagotribune.com/entertainment/shopping/chi-0609190188sep19.1.5115271.story?coll=chi-ent\_shopping-hed

THE DIGITAL PAGE

WEEKLY GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT TECHNOLOGY

Fabrics glow with Lumalive

September 19, 2006

Fashion and technology are gradually coming together. Sure, people dress up their phones in cute cases and wear their iPods in special pockets tucked into ties and underwear. But designer Anke Loh will take the combination further, unveiling a line of clothing that glows with Philips Lumalive technology.

Philips is no stranger to wearable technology, having previously worked with Levi -Strauss and other companies to sew phone pockets in clothes and put the controls of your MP3 players on your sleeves. Lumalive is different, allowing fabrics to glow. We're not too far from seeing T-shirts alight with the logos of Nike, Coke or other companies.

Before we get there, Loh will unveil her vision for Lumalive clothing with a show in the glass-encased lobby of UBS Tower, 1 N. Wacker Drive, on Friday. The event is part of the monthlong Fashion Focus Chicago.

Privacy protection

The Electronic Frontier Foundation offers some common-sense tips to protect your privacy when using search engines, including:

- Don't put personally identifying information such as your name, address, credit card number or Social Security number in your searches.
- Don't use a search engine operated by your Internet service provider.
- Don't log in to your search engine or its related services.

So, if you have accounts with services such as Gmail or Yahoo! Mail, don't use

Advertisement

CoCo Key
Water Resort
Rockford, IL

Click here for info
& reservations!

www.cocospring.com

Google or Yahoo!'s search engines, respectively. Or, use one browser for your searches and a different browser for your other activities.

For more tips, which were created after AOL released some users' personally identifiable search results as part of a research project, visit www.eff.org.

Copyright © 2006, Chicago Tribune